A Weekly Industry Update
November 2, 2026

Latest News & Insights

Despite mostly bearish news in the market, the November contract, shortly after hitting a six-month low, rebounded to expire on Wednesday at $2.817, a gain of 6.7%. This was largely considered to be a technical correction. Meanwhile, the new December prompt month dipped nearly 5% for the week to close on Friday at $2.898, with the back of the curve lower across the board as well.

Forecasted temperatures appear to be mostly above normal to normal across the country. The EIA posted a much higher than expected injection of 80 Bcf and these things in combination are providing the bearish signals. However, LNG export demand is expected to remain strong and at these price levels producers are talking about ratcheting back production levels. The market is a bit higher this morning to begin the week. Please reach out with any questions.
